

THE VACCINE SCAM

Virtually everything you have been told about the Covid-19 vaccine is false, except for the fact that it has arrived and is being given to a prioritized list of persons. It is not “safe and effective.” It does have serious side effects. It will require multiple doses because they have diluted the dosage to help cut down on serious side effects and the virus is constantly mutating and just like the flu shot. The virus has already mutated past the RNA antibodies the new vaccine is suppose to produce.

Naturally, the so-called “front line” health care workers are first to get it, and much of this is done with great fanfare with cameras rolling to show the reluctant public how “great” it is. Well, that didn’t turn out too well last week, when a nurse, Tiffany Dover, passed out on live TV 17 minutes after receiving it and telling the TV audience how wonderful it is.

A nurse at the Chattanooga Heart Institute Memorial Hospital (CHI) in Hamilton County, Tennessee was openly bragging about coronavirus vaccine safety on live TV when she took the vaccine herself, then within minutes lost consciousness and nearly face planted onto the floor before being caught and laid on the floor by fellow doctors. Her name is Tiffany Dover -- now sarcastically known as "Vaccine Diver" -- and she was talking about how everyone at the hospital was super excited to get the vaccine. Like most people who work in the corrupt medical establishment, Tiffany Dover has been brainwashed by a death cult of vaccine zealots and quack science pharmaceutical companies who know very well that their vaccines injure and kill millions of people every year around the world. That's why nurses like Dover are so shocked when bad things happen to themselves. Watch the video here:

Already the press is wrought with stories saying she is just prone to fainting. But as you can see in the video, she doesn’t simply faint: she first begins to feel bad, then has cognitive difficulties and finally collapses. Fainting happens all at once and quickly. Concerns over her long term health mounted as her social media posts stopped and haven’t yet resumed. Some even claimed she had died, but the hospital quickly stepped up to assure everyone she was OK—but the fact remains, she still hasn't been seen in person or updated her social media posts. She probably has been told not to talk about it.

Tucker Carlson was also disturbed by the one-sided promotion and propaganda about the vaccine. In a long monologue this week, he questions why they have to push this so hard if the vaccine is really so wonderful and effective. CNN went apoplectic over Carlson's mild criticism of vaccines, even though Carlson pandered to the vaccine lobby by saying how much he believed in vaccines and "how many millions of lives they have saved," which is untrue. Joe Lockhart of CNN was assigned to crucify Carlson implying that criticizing vaccines in a pandemic is a crime and no one should have the "free speech" to question vaccines.

During a deadly pandemic, spreading disinformation about the novel coronavirus is the equivalent of yelling fire in that crowded theater. The result is the same: it puts people's lives at risk.

No, it is the vaccines that put people's health and even lives at risk.

Yet, over the last nine months, Fox News has done everything in its power to discourage the behavior needed to mitigate the risk of contracting the virus. [Actually, most of Fox presenters back the Covid narrative and none preach resistance to the restrictions] And now, as cases in the US exceed 17 million, Fox News -- with Tucker Carlson being one of the chief carnival barkers on this one -- is fanning the flames of skepticism around the Covid-19 vaccine.

They are actually NOT "cases." In traditional medical terminology a case is one where symptoms clearly are present. This definition has been skewed to include testing positive, and 90% + are false positives.

Carlson openly encouraged people to be suspicious of what he described as the "glitzy" vaccine rollout on Thursday and went on to say, "So, how are the rest of us supposed to respond to a marketing campaign like this? Well, nervously. Even if you're strongly supportive of vaccines, and we are, even if you recognize how many millions of lives have been saved over the past 50 years by vaccines, and we do, it all seems a bit much. It feels false, because it is. It's too slick."

Yes, it is too slick, and too forced, and too false. It's ominous how the establishment has zero tolerance for criticism of vaccines, let alone for the conspiracy behind the entire Covid paranoia.

The miracle of developing vaccines on such a short timetable will not lead to any miraculous results unless a large percentage of Americans, and people around the world, gets vaccinated.

Watch and see what CNN will say when Covid doesn't go away. You'll never see a retraction of the above claim.

The science denial, vaccine skepticism and falsehoods that are spewed on Fox News pose a clear and present danger to the health of many Americans. This dangerous rhetoric should be framed as such and make headlines in our major newspapers and television news.

CNN is calling on "every reputable news organization" to condemn Carlson for merely casting suspicions on the vaccine rollout. Of course they will, but that won't change his influence with people who sense what truth he told, mild as it was.

Hear the truth about the growing side effects for people taking the vaccine:

Even the honest people at lower levels of the CDC have issued new guidelines after thousands were negatively affected by taking the Covid vaccines. Zerohedge.com reported that,

Thousands of people have been unable to work or perform daily activities, or required care from a healthcare professional, after getting the new COVID-19 vaccine, according to new data from the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC).

As of Dec. 18, 3,150 people reported what the agency terms "Health Impact Events" after getting vaccinated. The definition of the term is:

“unable to perform normal daily activities, unable to work, required care from doctor or health care professional.”

As The Epoch Times' Zachary Stieber reports, the people reporting the negative effects reported them through V-safe, a smartphone application. The tool uses text messages and web surveys to provide personalized health check-ins and allows users to quickly tell the CDC if they are experiencing side effects.

The reason the reported numbers are much higher than what you hear in the news is that they aren't filtered through the hospitals and doctors who are expected to downplay or deny the complaints about vaccine reactions. In fact, because most people outside the medical system don't have access to the V-safe reporting system so the numbers are much higher than what the CDC is concerned with.

The information was presented by Dr. Thomas Clark, a CDC epidemiologist, to the Advisory Committee on Immunization Practices, an independent panel that provides recommendations to the agency, on Saturday.

The CDC said that 272,001 doses of the vaccine were administered as of Dec. 19. That means most people who were vaccinated did not experience negative effects.

No, it doesn't mean that at all. Most people do experience side effects: headaches, fever, and aches, but recover, and don't report them.

The CDC has identified six case reports of anaphylaxis, or severe allergic reaction, that occurred following vaccination with the new vaccine, Clark reported. Other case reports were reviewed and determined not to be of anaphylaxis.

In an update on Friday, the agency stressed that anyone who has ever had a severe allergic reaction to any ingredient in a COVID-19 vaccine should not get that vaccine. People with severe allergic reactions to other vaccines should consult their doctor about getting the new vaccine while those with a history of anaphylaxis not related to vaccines “may still get vaccinated.”

This is incorrect. People without allergies have also experienced these reactions. An Alaska clinician is the THIRD in the state to have an allergic reaction to Pfizer's COVID-19 vaccine this week. A Fairbanks, Alaska clinician came down with anaphylactic symptoms 10 minutes after receiving Pfizer's shot, and had no prior history of allergic reactions.

At least five healthcare workers in Alaska experienced adverse reactions after getting the Pfizer vaccine, the Anchorage Daily News reported. One of two experiencing adverse reactions at the Bartlett Regional Hospital required treatment at the hospital for at least two nights. An Illinois hospital halted vaccinations after four workers suffered adverse reactions.

Noting that he was speculating, Marks said it’s known that polyethylene glycol - a component present in both the Pfizer vaccine and one from Moderna that regulators approved earlier in the day - can be associated, uncommonly, with allergic reactions. Both vaccines have “systemic side effects,” which are “generally mild,” Marks said.

They go away after a day. According to the FDA website, the most commonly reported side effects include tiredness, headache, muscle pain, and chills. The agency said they go away after several days.

That is because they have a decent immune system. Those who are immune deficient don’t recover so easily and can experience permanent harm—especially when they get auto-immune disabilities.

One volunteer in Pfizer’s late-stage clinical trial experienced an allergic reaction. Two people in Moderna’s phase 3 clinical trial experienced anaphylactic reactions, the company said during a meeting on Thursday. But the data showed the benefits outweigh the risk, FDA officials said, as they granted emergency use authorization to the vaccines about seven days apart.

So, that's the formula: that the "benefits (which are totally unproven) outweigh the risks (which are substantial, if you include long-term effects which no one is tracking). You would never find the FDA using that logic on vitamins and herbs.

Four medical team members at Advocate Condell Medical Center in Libertyville experienced reactions shortly after receiving the Pfizer COVID-19 vaccination. Their symptoms included tingling and elevated heart rates, the hospital said in a statement. They suspended vaccinating until they recovered and then resumed giving the shot to others. The FDA would quickly ban any natural product that produced these results, but not vaccines or drugs.

The "New" Covid Mutation in the UK

Of course, there's a new mutation in the UK. There are mutations of Covid everywhere, but they are using this one to justify further lockdowns. Predictably, without evidence, the Brits claim that the Covid tests can pick up this new variant (impossible without full genetic investigation) and that the vaccine still works against it. The big lie continues! Michael Snyder outlines 8 aspects of this false panic in the UK. In Brackets I add my counters to all this fear mongering.

On Sunday, hordes of London residents were flooding out of the city after they learned that British Prime Minister Boris Johnson was going to put them in Tier 4 lockdown for the holidays. #1 British Prime Minister Boris Johnson says that this new version of COVID-19 "is 70 percent more contagious than the original strain" ... [That's the way it is with most mutation, but they don't tell you mutant forms are even less dangerous.]

#2 We are being told that this new variant is the main reason why the number of new cases in London has doubled over the past week... [no, as always, it's because of more testing yielding false positives.]

#3 According to Dr. Susan Hopkins, this new strain has now spread to almost every other part of the UK... [They can't prove that. The generic

Covid test can't distinguish between mutations]

#4 According to the BBC, this new version “is rapidly replacing other versions of the virus”. [how do they claim to know that without a new and complex test?]

#5 There are two key mutations that are causing a tremendous amount of concern. The first apparently makes it much easier for humans to catch the virus...

#6 The second key mutation could potentially be even more dangerous, because it may make “antibodies from the blood of survivors less effective at attacking the virus”... [That always happens. Antibodies from any coronavirus are never specific to the next mutation. But it's the general state of the immune system that determines how quickly the body gears up for any new infection. We never depend on specific old antibodies to fight colds and other coronavirus.]

#7 Joe Biden's pick for surgeon general is insisting that the vaccines that have been developed will likely work against this version of the virus as well... [Likely? This is hype.] Vivek Murthy, Biden's nominee for surgeon general, on Sunday urged Americans not to let concerns over the new strain shake their faith in vaccination. [Who still has faith in it? Over 40% of Americans don't want it.]

#8 Multiple countries have announced that they are shutting down travel from the UK in an attempt to keep this new variant from spreading. So far, the U.S. continues to allow flights from the UK, and this is making New York Governor Andrew Cuomo very angry... [Since when do we care what this radical governor thinks?]

In other Covid News:

A federal agency (Equal Employment Opportunity Commission) announced last week that employers can legally require their workers to take the COVID-19 vaccine, and can prevent them from entering the workplace if they refuse... This is how the COVID vaccine will be enforced: through businesses, much like how the COVID social distancing and masks measures were enforced nationwide.

[Newswars.com]

But, since Corporations don't have blanket immunity like vaccine makers, they can be sued by employees who are harmed by the vaccine, so if you know someone who succumbs to corporate pressure to take the vaccine, tell them to get their mandate in writing and let their bosses know they intend to take legal action against them for any vaccine harm.

The EEOC isn't a court of law, so their flawed opinion isn't law, but I wouldn't be surprised if the courts go along. This new push for corporations to mandate the vaccine shows why it was (and still is) important for everyone to vigorously protest the stupidity of wearing masks and social distancing. As Sen. Rand Paul, \(a doctor\) said,

The mask mandates pushed by health bureaucrats and Democrats are really all about submission, not public safety. ” “It'd be one thing if we were told you have to give up your liberty, you have to give up your freedom, we're going to save your life. But what if you have to give up all your freedoms and they're wrong on the science?

They are wrong on the science, and now we know it is all about getting people used to being in abject compliance with emergency orders. Masks may not hurt you (they do to some people) but the vaccine will, and continued shutdowns will do a lot of permanent economic damage. And these restrictions didn't work at all anyway, as Sen. Paul points out:

“Every one of the mandates — and you look in country after country, state after state — you look at when the mask mandates went in — the incidents went up exponentially after the mandates. Restaurants, nobody can eat in a restaurant, there's no science behind any of that.” [Actually only the incidents of testing went up exponentially] “There's no evidence that that slowed down the [spread]. ... The trajectory of the virus hasn't been altered at all by any of these things,”

More data on the Flawed PCR Test:

Dr. Joseph Mercola has finally put together the definitive analysis of why the PCR test is flawed. I have covered other analysis before, but this is the best and most complete. Read it here, and keep it for reference when someone you know thinks the test is accurate.
